

Examples of inspirational work with children and young people

Research involving children and young people is an opportunity to learn about the way children and young people experience and understand the world. Armed with this knowledge policy makers and practitioners can shape better children and young people's services.

Through engagement in research children and young people can provide alternative views of the world which can help to shape the lives of others and their communities.

See also:

'The Open University's work with children and young people'

<http://wels.open.ac.uk/research/childrens-research-centre/young-voices>

'Do we really listen to children and young people?'

<https://www.open.edu/openlearn/health-sports-psychology/childhood-youth/do-we-really-listen-children-and-young-people>